Brand-New CAR

Betty Brown had just moved to Centerville—and captured every male heart in the local high school. The most lovesick of all belonged to Hank Wilson, who dreamed day and night of her warm brown eyes and honey-colored hair. How to land a girl like Betty? The problem plagued him, for she was no ordinary girl, to be won by malts and cokes. Hank thought he had the answer when his father said that he had ordered a new car—a wonderful, dreamy Willoughby-8. There were very few of those in Centerville, and any girl who could even get to ride in one would be the envy of the town. And straightway Hank Wilson knew how he was going to win Betty—with a streamlined Cupid named Willoughby-8!

He felt confident now; able to approach her without getting tongue-tied in the process. And the day on which he first walked her home was one of purest joy. "How d'ya like it?" he asked, with affected nonchalance, showing her a picture of the new job dad had ordered.

"Like it! Why, that's a Willoughby-8—the smoothest thing on the road!" she breathed. "Golly, anybody'd be proud to even get into one!"

That was all Hank had to hear. Throwing caution to the winds, he asked her to accompany him to the Spring Prom—in the new car, of course! And eagerly, Betty assented. Hank went home a deliriously happy boy, feeling that nothing could go wrong now, and that this was the best of all possible lives. The prom was next Saturday night, and the Willoughby would be delivered Saturday afternoon, just in time for the big event. Of course, it would take some managing to get dad to let him have it on that very first night, but Hank had few fears on that score, because dad was regular, and was bound to let him have it when he knew how important it was. And that's the way it turned out—for after demurring just slightly at first, Mr. Wilson laughed indulgently, remembering that he had been a boy himself, and consented.

So there wasn't a cloud in the sky when the big day dawned. Hank exulted in knowing that he had dated the most beautiful, desirable girl ever to have come to Centerville. But he wasn't going to get stuck-up about it—no sir! His humility told him that it was the brand-new Willoughby-8 that had done it, not him—but who was he to question such marvelous luck? He hurried out to the porch to await the car's delivery. An hour passed—two—three! It was overdue—where was it? Then Mr. Wilson stepped from the house, his face disturbed. There'd just been a telephone call—something about trouble in the delivery schedule—and they wouldn't get the car for another week!

The bottom fell out of Hank's life with a resounding crash. It was the end of everything. Betty had only consented because of the brand-new-car—she'd never have even considered him without it! Why, there wasn't even another car to take her in, because dad had traded in his old one on the Willoughby! And anyway, he couldn't approach this beautiful, this unattainable girl with anything less than a Willoughby-8! Now he didn't even dare face her. Utterly crushed, he found that he couldn't even summon up enough nerve to call her. He could only crouch hopelessly in the living room, watching the clock as the hours passed. It was eight o'clock now . . . the time when he should be at her house. Miserably, he removed the phone from the hook . . . he couldn't stand hearing her reproachful voice when she called to find out what had happened to him. And more time passed . . . miserable time . . . until he heard his mother's voice saying, "He's right in here—won't you come in?"

It was Betty! What could he say to her? He began stammering excuses—anything but the awful truth—but she stopped him. "I know all about what happened," she said softly. "It—it doesn't matter to me that the new Willoughby wasn't delivered. The bus line passes here and lets us off at the school—if we hurry, we can still make it! It was you I wanted to go with—not your brand-new car! And in case you want to know how I knew about your not having the car—well, my father was the salesman who sold the Willoughby-8 to your dad!"

GIRL next door

The trouble with a big city is that you seldom even get to know the people next door. But this was perfectly all right with Bob Peterson. Particularly when it came to whomever it was in the adjoining apartment house that owned that vicious, undisciplined dog. You see, Bob owned a dog, too—a gentle one named Bosco, whom he let out for a run every morning. Unfortunately, it was at the very time when that oaf next door let his dog out. And whenever poor Bosco returned, he wore every evidence of having been in a losing fight. It was clear something had to be done about it, even if Bob had to come to grips with the marauding dog's villainous owner. He made inquiries, and found out that the owner's name was Adams. The telephone book gave the number of an Adams at the address in question, and Bob lost no time in calling up. He sure was going to tell that lug off—and if he got mean about it, he'd be sorry!

To his amazement, it was a feminine voice that answered the telephone—a voice that seemed soft enough at first, but turned cold and sharp when Bob revealed the purpose of his phone call. When he hung up the phone, he was in a rage, because he'd gotten exactly nowhere. Not that he could have expected any satisfaction from a woman who owned such a dog—and had such a hateful voice. He could imagine what she looked like—tall, rawboned, with a sharp nose and disagreeable air. Just a belligerent old maid! He'd suggested that she let her dog out at a different time, and she'd retorted that if there were any changing to do, he could do it. Well, she'd better be the one to change—and she probably would, now that she'd learned that he was nobody to trifle with.

But it appeared that both parties were stubborn, for neither would give in. Both dogs went out at the same time, and Bosco continued to come home much the worse for wear. Bob grew desperate. He knew he couldn't let his dog suffer because of his stubbornness, especially when a series of further calls to Miss Adams produced nothing but a fine mutual hatred. Boy, what a battleaxe she must be! To his mental picture of her, he added a jutting chin and no teeth—but now he knew he had to give in to the extent of escorting Bosco on his morning runs thereafter. And so it was that, early the next A.M., Bob emerged from his house with Bosco on a leash. Suddenly there came a low growl from Bosco, and Bob quickly saw the reason. Coming from the house next door was another and larger dog, also on a leash. Obviously, it was the offender. But what made Bob start was what was on the other end of the leash. Miss Adams, of course—but how different from his mental picture! Slim, petite, brunette—deep blue eyes and an adorable round chin. In his amazement, he dropped the leash—and she, also amazed, did the same.

"I—I thought you were a hatchet-faced old—" said Bob, feebly.

"I thought you were a mean old curmudgeon," breathed Miss Adams. Then she recovered herself, and her blue eyes flashed fire. "Well, you may not be old, but you're certainly mean enough! Complaining about my dog, when it's yours that's at fault! I'll have you know that my Laddie gets chewed up every time your mongrel is loose!"

"Did you say mongrel?" blazed Bob. "Well, that mutt of yours is no bargain!"

They were practically nose to nose by this time, each blasting away furiously. Incongruously, it occurred to Bob that she was pretty, for such a spitfire. And Miss Adams paused, thinking what a shame it was that a young man so handsome should be so downright mean! Then, suddenly, a salvo of barks made both their heads swing in the direction of the dogs. There was Bosco and Laddie, sporting together happily, suddenly the best of friends! "Gosh, I—guess we've got nothing to fight about after all, Miss Adams! Er—you already know my last name, but my first name's Bob!"

"My—friends call me Cookie!" said Miss Adams, smiling shyly. And as she met his admiring gaze, she lowered her eyes demurely. For she was a woman, and wise—and knew that out of encounters just like these, love could spring. As for Bob, he was already sure of it!
